Death of Marwood, the English Executioner-His Character.

elegram from London announces the death of William Marwood, the Queen's william Marwood was born near Horn castle, England, and resided there all his life. He was fifty-eight years of age, stood five feet seven inches high, and weighed 180 pounds. He was a man of powerful 180 pounds. He was a man of powerful frame, and came under the designation of "wiry" in build. With iron-gray hair, benevolent countenance, and pleasing manner, he was by no means the type of man the popular idea would mould of an executioner. Well but plainly dressed in garments of country fashion, with ample collar and the old-style neck-stock of our fathers, he looked more hke a lay preacher than anything else. He was, in fact, a devout member of the Methodist Church, and was regarded by his fellow-townsmen in Horncastle as a most estimafithers, he looked more like a lay preacher than anything else. He was, in fact, a devout member of the Methodist Church, and was regarded by his fellow-townsmen in Horncastle as a most estimable and worthy citizen. His account of how he became an executioner is interest.

Schooner Star-Spangled-Banner, Mullen, Philadelphia, ites, Norvell, Leake & Co.; vessel, Curtis how he became an executioner is interest. how he became an executioner is interest-ing. He had all his life been a careful stu-[By Telegraph.] dent of anatomy, and when he heard of Caleraft's intended retirement it was, as the Puritans used to say, "borne in upon his mind" that, under Providence, he could accomplish a work of public usefulness by conducting executions in a scientific manmer, with a minimum of suffering to the unfortunate criminal. Marwood was a man doing his duty to both God and man. He did his utmost to divest executions of odious features. In Calcraft's time the rope used was only two or three feet long, and when Calcraft had drawn the fatat bolt he used to descend the scaffold, and, seizing the victim's legs, swing on by them until death was a certain fact. This seems incredible, and yet it is true. Marwood's rope was always eight or nine feet long, and he asserted that by his process death was instantaneous. Marwood appeared to have studied every process of decapitation and hanging with a view to arriving at that which is least painful, and he affirmed that by his system the victim suffered far less agony than by the guillotine, the axe, or the "short rope." In support of these views he furnished abundant anatomical and other reasons, and satisfied the Government Medical Department thereon.

Marwood's services were called into re-quisition in over one hundred cases during the twelve years that he was her Majesty's executioner. In the beginning of the present century there were ten times as many murderers, and hundreds of other persons convicted of minor crimes, hanged an-nually. Considering the vast increase in the population during the nineteenth cen-tury, the statistics of capital punishment furnish a remarkable proof that pessimist jeremiads about the increasing wickedness of the world are opposed to facts.

Mr. Marwood, following the example extensively set him by his fellow-country-men, visited this country in the spring of R E M O V A L . nen, visited this country in the spring of 1880. Among other places visited by him was the Tombs Prison, New York. He was conducted through the prison, and given an opportunity to make a critical inspection of its most distinguished inmates, many of whom he closely scrutinized from a professional standpoint. He held a brief conversation with Chastine Cox and Pictro Balbo the convicted mynderers under Balbo, the convicted murderers under sentence of death. He manifested a particular interest in the gallows and particular interest in the gallows and its contrivances, whose details he examined and pronounced semi-barbarous, explaining to the satisfaction of all concerned that the American prevailing mode of execution provided needless suffering for the victim. The gallows of Old England, like most of her other institutions, he prorounced an infinitely superior article to any that could be seen elsewhere. He to any that could be seen elsewhere. He had no opportunity of yet witnessing the performances of Judge Lynch's executive officers, but he had no doubt they lacked that elegance and perfection to which hang-ing has been brought in his native land.

One of the latest things reported of Marwood was his delivery of an address on "The Times," in Sheffield, of which the Daily Telegraph of that place gave the following report: "The Bible is a great book," he said—"the greatest of all books—it is the book of England's greatness," He then went on for a few moments to exhort his audience to lead a Godly and Christian life, but his equanoistic was upset by a person in BIRTHDAY PRESIDENT COMMENTS. ments to exhort his audience to lead a Godly and Christian life, but his equaninity was upset by a person in the gallery calling out, in lugubrious tones: "Let us pray!" which was followed by laughter. "England," he continued, "is a Bible country, the Queen is a Bible Queen, and the people are a Bible people. Parents should teach their children the Bible, and they should do all they could to relieve suffering humanity. The wheel of time is constantly casting people off into eternity." "So is the rope," shouted out a wag in the body of the hall, and this created roars of laughter. The speaker continued, taking no heed of the interruption, to say they were all being cast off; they were all "dropping" away. This caused much laughter again. "This life," said he, "is a great struggle." [A voice, "So is summat else," and laughter.] Marwood said he intended to speak on a different subject, but under the circumstances he had chauged his mind, and would not take that "line." [Loud laughter.] A reference to the state of freland followed, but the audience became noisy, and after several attempts to proceed Marwood bowed and retired.

A Cincinnati Mystery. STRANGE DISAPPEARANCE AND RETURN OF THE YOUNG DAUGHTER OF A WEALTHY CITI-

The Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette gives details of a mystery that has recently been partially explained after causing intense misery to a wealthy family for nearly a year past. Miss Murphy left her comfortable home one day, saying that she was going to Riverside to visit a relative. Not going thither and not returning a search was made, and the only trace discovered was that she had sold her parasol for $2 and borrowed fifty cents from a geocet who knew her. Her father had no idea that his daughter, stricken with grief over the death of a loved brother, had fled for sechusion to some convent. He was strengthened in this idea by the fact that Miss Murphy had often talked of becoming a una. Acting upon this supposition, he inspected every nunnery in the country, but all to vain. Her father was driven nearly insane, coming at last to the conclusion to some convent. He was strengthened in this idea by the fact that Miss Murphy had often talked of becoming a una. MERCURY has been more destructive to human health and life than war, pestilence, and famine combined. So said a distinguished writer many years ago, and it is as true to-day as then. The poor victim of Blood-Disease is drugged with Mercury to cure the malady, and then dosed with Iedides to cure him of the Mercurial Polsoning; but instead of any relief, the first breaks down his general health and makes him a cripple, and the other ruins his digestive organs. To those afflicted in this way Swift's Specific is the greatest boon on earth, and is worth more than its weight in gold.
